

Engineering - Networks

Speaker: Bruce Hahne

Bruce Hahne is an engineering manager at Google, serving as part of the Corporate Network Engineering team, which designs and operates the internal global network for Google employees. Prior to Google, he's held positions as a senior network engineer with the IT (information technology) team at Palo Alto Research Center / PARC, and with San Francisco-based internet service provider Digital Island, which provided some of the early connectivity for ETrade. He's also the co-founder of one of the first internet service providers in Japan. Bruce received his Bachelor's from Swarthmore College in Pennsylvania, followed by an M.S. degree from Cornell University, and an MBA from U.C. Berkeley.