

I Will Change The World By Child Literacy

This world is a tempestuous sea

Over its highs and lows I ride,

I say to myself, "Is it real, or is it just transience?"

However, I remind myself, "I need to do, and I need to act now,

I can change the world."

I am simple, ordinary, and minuscule

'Tis but a trifle,

With passion aflame,

In my heart,

I am busy,

In my neighborhood.

Teaching one little kid.

Today I teach one,

Tomorrow it will be many.

On this task,

I am impassioned,

Furthermore, I will not stop.

For I know,

The Mahatma has said

"In a gentle way,

You can shake the world."

In tomorrow's world,
Not far away,
My persistent effort,
Will make inequalities narrow,
Opportunities to unlock.
Tomorrow's world will swell,
As more people,
Get to read and write.
Good thoughts, values, and morals
In society will thus prevail.
"Aha," I say to myself
And continue my trail.
For I have seen tiny seeds,
Grow mighty trees.
My small step towards education,
Is the passport to success.

Climate change is knocking,
Also the climate data,
Is so shocking.
While we still grieve,
The loss from pandemic.
Let us not forget

That twas the vaccine,
In addition, of nations rising,
Joining hands together,
For vaccine sharing.
Let us not forget that,
The research and collaboration
Was the outcome of education.
At my end,
I will not rest.
For I will teach one more kid
One more child will get to read and write.
I will open one more mind
I will give to them in my small measure.
I am confident of the world's future treasure.
